Expression & Imagination

When I first came to the Archipel site on Samui Island in the Gulf of Thailand, I saw the natural slope of the landscape and watched the passage of the sun across this exceptional setting.

I was challenged to design a luxurious living environment that would harmonize with every aspect of nature - climate, topography, vegetation, the elements - while meeting the functional demands of all good architecture.

Modern Living

Modern living should truly mean an individual choice for something new and original that will bring a fresh dimension to the quality of our lives.

Actual

A True Island

Location is the classic first criterion when choosing a property.

For a new tropical home in Southeast Asia, the location is Koh Samui. No mere appendage to the mainland, Samui is a true island. Overlooking one of the world's most beautiful marine preserves and untouched by industry, it is a haven of sandy beaches, tranquil coves and a lush green interior.

Remarkably, Samui is also easily reached; there are 20 flights a day from Bangkok, taking just 55 minutes, as well as direct air links to Phuket, Kuala Lumpur and Singapore.

The Project

Accessed by a 400-metre private road, each of Archipel's three to five bedroom residences have a 60-90 sq.meter private pool and an uninterrupted sea view, as well as direct access to the beach.

Also, by being built into the slope of the land, each of them enjoys complete privacy. While the design provides generous space for all the usual living and functional areas, the distinguishing feature of Archipel's architecture is the innovative blending of open and enclosed spaces. Not only is a rare harmony with nature thus created, the actual living experience interacts with nature and the rhythm of the day set by the passage of the sun. This is accentuated in such integral features as a solarium and a lotus pond facing the setting sun. Natural materials have been used throughout to preserve the integrity of the architecture.

Management & Investment

Matching the creativity of the design is the total professionalism of Archipel's management. With a management company fully experienced in the development and care of tropical homes, residents can be assured of property upkeep, efficient utilities and vigilant security.

Given Samui's reputation as one of the world's most desirable tropical islands - a reputation soon to be enhanced by what promises to rank as Thailand's most beautiful golf course - together with Archipel's distinctive design, appreciation potential is one of the highest in the region.

The investment value of the property is not the least of Archipel's attractions. Located in what has been dubbed Samui's 'miracle mile', development in the area is both high-end and limited in scale.
